Proofreading for Spelling

Find the misspelled words and circle them. Write them correctly on the lines below.

I saw a good documentary last night showing the progression of how a television show goes from an idea to an actual program. First, a writer prepared a proposal describing the big idea for the show. Once management approved the idea and signed a contract, writers got to work on preparing a script for a trial episode. Many writers got an opportunity to inject their ideas into the script. Sometimes a writer would raise a vocal objection to an idea or a word choice and argue to extract it from the story. Later, the producers would hold an audition for actors. The pilot episode was taped in front of a live audience. The pilot show was well received, but it did expose some problems, causing the producers to impose their ideas to improve the show. Finally, the show was ready to go into production and air on television!

Commas with Introductory Words and Phrases

Use commas after introductory words and phrases.
• Set off introductory words such as well, yes, and no with a comma.
  Yes, I’d like to be part of the project.
• Set off long introductory prepositional phrases with a comma.
  With a dramatic sigh, Justin explained the problem.
• Use a comma after participial phrases that begin a sentence.
  Buzzing from blossom to blossom, the bees transfer pollen.

Activity  Rewrite each sentence. Add commas where they are needed.

1. When visiting Texas did you have time to see any farms?

2. Settling on a flower the bee began its search for nectar.

3. No bees do not usually sting beekeepers.

4. Mystified by the honeybee deaths scientists began an investigation.

5. Indeed a virus may be to blame for the honeybee crisis.
Commas in a Series

Commas should be used to separate three or more words or phrases in a series.

I want a book, a glass of water, and a quiet place to sit.

Commas can be used to combine sentences that tell about the same thing.

Focus Trait: Voice

Commercial scripts can use a formal or an informal voice. The choice depends on the intended audience and on the product being advertised. A formal voice usually suits serious subjects or products aimed at adults. An informal voice can be used for lighter subjects or products aimed at children or teens.

Formal: Nature’s Apple Juice is the smart choice for healthy families.

Informal: Hey, kids! Thirsty? Try a cold glass of Nature’s Apple Juice!

Read the formal commercial script below. Rewrite it in an informal and lively voice.

Formal Voice

Narrator: Honey isn’t the only product people get from bees. Visit Barbara’s Beeswax Boutique at the Empire Mall. You’ll find a complete line of beeswax products, from candles to lip balm, at affordable prices. Barbara guarantees no bees are harmed in harvesting the beeswax.
